Short Breaks Update for Families with Disabled Children and Young People

How does it work?

Your personal coach will help you through online coaching and video analysis, to step back, reflect, and explore ideas and ways to support your child, giving you the skills and strategies to integrate changes in day-to-day life.

Everything happens in your home, through a secure video link, with a dedicated coach accompanying you step by step. Coaches are qualified early years practitioners, Occupational Therapists or Child Psychotherapists, with specific training to support Autistic children. Your coach will be allocated based on your child's needs.

What parents often notice

Every child and every family is different, so outcomes are individual, but families commonly tell us they experience:

For children:
More moments of shared attention, connection, and joyful back-and-forth play.

Clearer, more responsive communication and interaction with family members.

A growing sense of being understood and supported in everyday life.

For parents:
A clearer understanding of your child's communication cues and play initiatives.

More confidence in joining your child's play and supporting their engagement.

A growing trust in your own intuition, and with that, less stress in the everyday and the ability to resolve day-to-day challenges.

Who can join?

If you would like to enroll on the programme, we have a few remaining spaces available to start immediately, and we have places available for advanced registration starting in September 2026.
